Excerpt: . . . looks upon Hohenlinden as one of the greatest of the defensive battles, says: --Such cases, as that of an enemy uncovering his flanks and rear, certainly occur now very rarely, still it does happen, and most easily when the enemy indemnifies himself by offensive enterprises. To refer once more to Napoleon, he tries to take from Moreau the credit of Richpanses march and says that Moreau gave no orders at all and that Richpanse acted on his own initiative. This is not a fact, for the written orders telling him to march on St. Christophe still exist. They were not, it is true, very precise, but Moreau knew the man to whom he gave them; he had served under him for years, in his celebrated retreat, at Engen, Stockach, and Moeskirch, etc. , and had always proved himself Richpanse. , , J -L, a gallant,...
