Excerpt: . and the dispensations issuing thence; and cried out C lx5vPlargely, that so corrupt and Popish a court might be wholly i discharged. This book urged also, how unsuitable great A l 7a worldly incomes were to men whose function was spiritual, and that Archbishops and Bishops employed theirs only in retaining many idle servants, and in luxurious living. And that it were good that they were reduced to a more private condition, which was more agreeable to the Ministers of Christ. Many in the Queen s Court and elsewhere won dered that the Archbishop was so silent upon all these reflections, and that he made so little complaint as he did. This was signified to him by his fast friend, the Treasurer. But upon this the Archbishop drew up, first, a brief 8.0-Vindicates count of the Faculty Office, which yet he was not fond of: 1 ; ; at all; secondly, the reasons that he was not so forward to make his complaints; and thirdly, the vindication of himself in the expending of his revenues. Of all this he took some pains to write, for the instruction of the Treasurer, by way of private letter to him, that he might, as opportunity served, declare these matters to the Queen or others. But to be particular in a thing so materially relating to our good Prelate, to this tenor did the Archbishop handle these arguments: I. As to the Faculty Ofiice; The Prince hath...
