Comparative effectiveness or patient-centered outcomes research (CERPCOR) has been defined by the Federal Coordinating Council for CER as the conduct and synthesis of research comparing the benefits and harms of different interventions and strategies to prevent, diagnose, treat and monitor health conditions in real world settings. The purpose of CERPCOR is to improve health outcomes by developing and disseminating evidence-based information to patients, clinicians, and other decisionmakers, responding to their expressed needs, about which interventions are most effective for which patients under specific circumstances. The interventions compared may include medications, procedures, medical and assistive devices and technologies, diagnostic tests, behavioral changes, and delivery system strategies. CERPCOR designs may include clinical trials, observational studies, secondary analyses of databases, systematic reviews with or without meta-analyses, and cost-effectiveness analyses. The Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ) is the lead Federal agency charged with improving the quality, safety, efficiency, and effectiveness of health care for all Americans. As 1 of 12 agencies within the Department of Health and Human Services, AHRQ supports health services research to improve the quality of health...
