Not illustrated. 1902 Excerpt: .labourers; in Uganda the officers were new to each other and to the country, and many of them were new to the language and character of the Indian coolie. In Beluchistan, all India was available for the supply of transport animals, and 600 military carts and drivers were placed at the disposal of the platelaying staff; in Uganda there were no transport animals, and nearly all those imported--63 camels, 128 mules, 579 bullocks, and 774 donkeys--died from the effects of the tsetse-fly. In Beluchistan any unforeseen want could be supplied at once by railway if telegraphed for, and written explanations reached headquarters in a few days; in Uganda any unforeseen want, if telegraphed for, could not be supplied until great delay had occurred, and explanations, owing to the infrequency of the mails and the length of voyage, required usually more than a month to reach destination. In Beluchistan the food supply was unlimited, while in Uganda all food for coolies had to be imported, and it was necessary to establish corn-mills and to work them night and day to supply the coolies. In Beluchistan materials of all kinds could be brought by the railway from any part of India, while in Uganda nearly everything had to be imported. In Beluchistan there was excellent water both for drinking and for the locomotives at the base; in Uganda, water, where obtainable, was generally bad, both for drinking and for the locomotives, and at Kilindini terminus it was necessary...
